Renewable Energy Outreach by the City of Jackson and TREEDC

Warren Nevad, MTAS Municipal Management
Consultant and TREEDC Executive Director

TREEDC and the city of Jackson held a clean energy workshop for community leaders, businesses and farmers on Tuesday, April 13 at the University of Tennessee West Research Center. Jackson Councilman Ernest Brooks II/TREEDC Advisory Board Member and MTAS Management Consultant/TREEDC Executive Director Warren Nevad crafted the curriculum of biofuels and renewable energy power systems for this inaugural workshop sponsored by Jackson Energy Authority and the Jackson Chamber of Commerce. More than 60 attendees from 20 cities, 16 counties and seven states attended the workshop which focused on developing new markets for renewable energy development in West Tennessee.

Chris Disher, Business Development Manager for Flex Fuel U.S. highlighted their firm's successful efforts in converting the Chicago, Illinois public works department's older vehicles to flex fuel vehicles while reducing greenhouse gases for its fleet. Russell Beals, Vice President with Biodiesel Logic discussed the Hoover, Alabama model program in collecting waste vegetable oil and converting it to biodiesel. He announced that Clarksville recently opened a similar process with the assistance of TREEDC. Greg Martin with the Boone Pickens Clean Energy Group demonstrated successful approaches used in Maryland and Virginia to convert garbage trucks into compressed natural gas vehicles. Dr. Don Tyler of the University of Tennessee reviewed the university's partnership with Genera Energy to grow a new energy crop in Tennessee.

Steven Maupin, President of Diversified Renewable Energy Systems of McKenzie urged cities and counties to consider their municipal wood waste as a decentralized green energy source for public facilities. Christopher Charlton of Greenway Renewable Energy informed the audience about the potential of wind energy and shared the successful story of the Wisconsin wind energy toolbox. Chad Payne with Solar & Renewable Power Systems of Jackson described the various incentives for solar energy use by small businesses. TREEDC President and Pikeville Mayor Greg Johnson was awarded an

2010 ICMA Southeast Young Professionals Leadership Institute: Two Perspectives

Tracy Baker, MTAS Post-graduate Management Intern

Thanks to MTAS, I was able to recently attend the 2010 International City/County Management Association Southeast Young Professionals Leadership Institute in Nashville. It was wonderful to see how many other young leaders are starting their careers in various capacities throughout our region, and how many diverse perspectives will have a voice at the table in the years to come. It was a perfect reflection of the books we discussed with the ICMA President, Bob O'Neill. We discussed the book True North by Bill George which uses over 125 interviews with top executives to argue that there is no single way to become an ideal leader. We also discussed Geoff Colvin's Talent is Overrated, which insists that individuals are not born to be great leaders, but become leaders gradually through deliberate practice and experience—great news for young soon-to-be-managers like myself!

We spent a great deal of time examining how our life experiences and individual preferences have shaped our emerging visions and organizational perceptions. It is amazing how adept we can be at understanding the directions and intentions of others if we only stop to listen to the personal reflections that seep through conversations over time.

This was my first time networking with city leaders from outside of Tennessee and it was a great experience. It is so easy to fail to look beyond our own area and familiar acquaintances for advice and counsel but I quickly realized that communities all over the southeastern U.S. are experiencing many of the same challenges and opportunities as our Tennessee cities.

On April 14 and 15, 2010, ICMA held a Young Professionals Leadership Institute in Nashville. The institute is geared for young professionals with master degrees in public administration who are just starting their careers. I do not fit that mold, having been with MTAS for nine years after working for several cities, but I attended in hopes of being able to recycle information with the interns and students that I work with on campus. I would like to share a few observations from that conference.

First, as tech savvy as this generation is, I was amazed at the absolute absence of texting and stepping out to accept phone calls that I typically witness in other conferences. These young professionals were there to learn and to absorb as much as they could. They embodied the concept of “wherever you are, be there” that so many of us toss aside to multitask.

As an extension of the first observation, there was very little “subgrouping” or chatting amongst participants while a speaker was presenting. Again, this reinforces the notion that these attendees were fully absorbed in the material and were eager to learn. It also demonstrated to me that they showed great respect to the speaker.

Finally, while all the individuals came from a variety of backgrounds with a myriad of histories that shaped who they are and how they came to be interested in public service, the desire to “do good” was strong among them all. It was refreshing and gave me great hope for the future of public administration.

Study of High Fire Mortality Rate in Tennessee

Melanie Purcell, MTAS Interim Executive Director

Tennessee has been ranked in the top five nationally for fire deaths for many years without a clear-cut explanation. While the usual suspects including lack of fire alarms, low income and low education have been identified as playing a role, none of these factors truly explain the consistent ranking in fire deaths. To begin investigating the high fire death mortality rate, MTAS hosted an inaugural meeting of a steering committee which will guide the development and application of research into this problem.

This kick-off meeting as well as the project itself are historic in bringing together members of local government, university researchers and staff, state and federal officials as well as members of the renowned FireTeamUSA based in Brentwood, Tennessee. MTAS and CTAS are partnering with Dr. David Folz of the University of Tennessee political science department to staff the research project and assemble the available data from all sources. A preliminary report is anticipated in the fall.

Twenty-five people were able to attend the April 2010 meeting and over 50 have been invited to participate in the ongoing project. Funds for the initial phase of the study have been provided by the Tennessee Fire Chiefs Association, the Tennessee Fire Inspectors Association and MTAS.

Municipal Court Clerk Conference: March 2010

Sarah Holley, MTAS Training Coordinator

In March 2010, 178 court clerks, recorders, police chiefs and judges gathered in Franklin for the fourth annual Municipal Court Clerk Conference. This conference has continued to grow over the four years MTAS has coordinated the program. The conference is made possible through a partnership with the Administrative Office of the Courts to provide training that will fulfill the state mandated three hours per designated court clerk.

The 2010 conference brought change this year as the first day of the conference included three concurrent sessions in order to reduce classroom size and facilitate access to the instructors for questions. Conference evaluations showed concurrent sessions were one of the most liked pieces of the conference. Topics in the concurrent sessions included a presentation by MTAS' Karen Beyke on the "Legal Authority of the Municipal Court," "Video Traffic Enforcement (Debunking the Myths)" by Sgt. Bill Stormet and Sgt. Bill Vahldiek of Gallatin as well as "Effective Communication in the Workplace" by MTAS Training Consultant Kurt Frederick. The second day of the conference the Tennessee Department of Safety offered an update on court action reports and electronic reporting which is always a crowd favorite.

If you missed this year's spring conference, don't worry! MTAS offers two opportunities for statewide training of court clerks per year with the conference in the spring and a four-hour workshop in the fall that is delivered in multiple locations across the state. Keep an eye on our Web site for more information on the fall training.

Generational Differences in Today's Workplace

Melanie Purcell, MTAS Interim Executive Director

There are currently up to four individual generations active in the work force today. This creates unprecedented communication and interpersonal relationship challenges as well as opportunities as there are specific behaviors and attitudes associated with each age group.

The four most commonly referred to groups are the "Traditionalist," "Boomers," "Gen-Xers," and "Gen-Yers/Millennials." Each generation reflects influences from individual backgrounds such as: regional culture and incidents; urban, suburban or rural childhood; education; and the socio-economic environment.

Strategies for meeting the challenge of an intergenerational workforce include: awareness of the outstanding events that influenced specific generations as well as those that influence individuals; redefining appropriate from the recipients point of view; and avoiding assumptions about age, race and gender being defining characteristics.

Corporate Expenditures on Political Donations

A recent U.S. Supreme Court case stated that there is no legitimate governmental interest justifying a ban on corporate expenditures on political donations. Hence, T.C.A. § 2-19-132, which prohibits corporations from making independent expenditures for the purpose of aiding or defeating a candidate, is likely unconstitutional. (Opinion No. 10-30)

Exceptions for the Issuance of Citations

When a person is cited for a misdemeanor in an officer's presence, generally that person is not arrested. However, if "a reasonable likelihood exists that the arrested person will fail to appear in court" that person can be arrested. A "failure to satisfy a traffic citation" on the person's drivers license history does not necessarily meet this standard. Prior conviction for the same offense does not meet the standard of "a reasonable likelihood...that the offense would continue or resume..."
